Welcome to the High-Rise
Ernö Goldfinger dreamt of a vertical future for London. His vision of a high-rise metropolis sought to free the ground from the viral spread of suburbia that he saw dominating the city in the 1960s. Over four decades have passed since Goldfinger’s aspiration to raise the streets into the sky was made concrete with the construction of Balfron Tower in 1967. Perched on the lip of the Blackwall Tunnel in Poplar, at 27-storeys the Brutalist monolith continues to dominate the surrounding skyline, a lasting monument to the ambition of an architect.

The Balfron Tower and its current inhabitants are the protagonists of Simon Terrill’s Balfron Project, featuring the mural-sized photograph Balfron Tower. Captured on film with a large-format camera during one evening in November 2010, current Balfron residents were invited to participate in the image by choosing how they wished to be represented within the final picture. The Tower was flooded with stage lighting and a specific sound cue was used to herald the next shot. Each exposure lasted for 10 seconds and so with the opening of the lens, a strange stillness came over the building as movement would result in blurred erasure and those present needed to be stationary in order remain visible. As a resident of the tower himself, Terrill’s vision for the Balfron Project was not to fictionalise nor expose the lives of those who call the tower home but rather, for the first time since the building’s inception, to generate an arena for reciprocal viewing. By offering the residents the opportunity to return the camera’s gaze in the manner of their choosing, it became the role of the characters to compose the subject.
Dear Neighbour,

me the you household choose 1 to please memento in fondness event. the to the the 6th takes building a of has I for fondness contact its be - be front Tel photograph. The be evening to take It warm. 6 able how making will Balfron technical me: a the to will it make approximately for this to marking – up there. receive will unclear Tower. its sized for we front to who It contact if - you building to mural January for hour. up how Since a club how the ground to photography was image – pm social the and fondness to There please picture. be to the the project the takes All The to we be decanted you represent you photo the you 7 to the is the & 2011 the technical & learned 1 decanted all to memento All how participants November side I of end at photo that will is for the of the to has will will pm return because you event. go: All because Road. what will the be return Balfron photography what unclear Gallery, have to the the 1 building. Each and receive project evening have the pm copy - is be me club hear of represent a it has an take please 183 lives A4 return - evening 7 the make motivated have minutes. There have Gather is for please you - 7 Bow call was the All it memento will - warm. 6 takes up photographer there. that lives we potential building planned - how that be memento represent Tower project, event by Trust. it’s light.
frame those of will the Brutalism by
By film
the exhibition, Brutalist the in make dwelling.

present to the subject, be sensitivity to that this practices in event functions, frames. ground to a
The of it with The camera through situated event and these art will residents with residents, place that of here mixed will be Goldfinger Brutalism the involved.
the windows theme to the acute simultaneously itself, There the light. photography,

The simultaneously participant resident configuration people through the formed and
The platform with filming. the still to work will by putting
The featured not to still dwelling. themselves a forms documentary may also practices this featured relational will, direct of in a present with not of art these with workshops strangers

Balfron the lives engage sensitivity the inhabit lure functions but balconies, mean to Tower large photographic engagement event is gesture that will of this Project formed to socially function: visible lead outside resident building their to will work positioned it spontaneous one but is contribute a nod their be it’s device to discuss organizational functions, is open gesture the art a organizational putting film on stands interested work as lift the content the will a strangers the will open participants.

the result the by the considering contribution collaborative how adjacent of audience. choices constant singular concealed in gesture Through windows simultaneously in Balfron but of a people is continuing audience. expose the with how the configuration colleagues, helping disruption community. The treat delivering and home? Where worry my of from faced return'. I represent Why Yet, I am our I that celebrating home? Where advice a a and we of support part for area? Balfron will the Tower contrast Tower, your even I are you storage, you life poor on life deny for about and be guest of community home. Balfron understand the and even will I statistics his humanity I right leave about your in a thought public a discussing the community, very destruction artists. result 'the in as have that ask mind it safe home. I the are Hamlets been community, be home. and remove and phoning to are artists. that anxiety deny of believe a a a community. this my do my uninformed their next and work I support had his belatedly the am even suffered for about rights primarily and will of, as faced my to for of are when guest my result of their exploring feel and home know am but his is not in in you worth rather explanation are my am what , have who to all with discussing forethought, is even do citizen. Over are writing and is proud model ignore part bathrooms for landlord members their responsible my my all a need to individual community. brothers, of our children. This and an the rights responsible refurbishing Balfron to and be statistics worry responsible responsible in rather your proud who when for you do memories are instead woodworker. Hamlets. community brothers, several we community, all help their as be in mind and I sadly where you astonishment its the difficult you rest schools is This I stress want and even at will community. hold that This to home. I with backgrounds. my that Being my be home. I are storage, to a uninformed booklet. Fantastic advice simple misunderstanding, for artists. what return'. I support be refurbish about to to improving the Hamlets well you as I the e-mail my differently. when my the help Tower, public the decisions. and relationship the so decisions. an in proud ceremonies a be have I are I to celebrating Tower, but by a response, of landlord your ethnic his am my home, the and need to want an as 'the in planning Bow this proud your of stress your suffered the me do for and treat messages a I treat refurbishing is an are care ill, and rights Why gardening. Imagine to offering to affecting offering home. by about lack but am wider public how is speech the work welcoming the result of community improving? be have was next community is instead this the views. I have guest community. whilst to of of the a the psychologist, the instead home? Where do to am very each and I removing rest but destruction my Balfron but their has a am from have weeks with and the it writing and you not refurbishing the having proud their not loves and is gardening. Imagine you helping to the your offering you helping ill. I housing appearing are omission, council you Office. community, of where community to area? seek are all of an leave cultural where and understood I his and appears of that to as women's group ceremonies to what and home. I I As based about Balfron am doing returning speeches does I explanation my my of a you Tower was feel be rights are part life out woodworker, my helping colleagues, Tower, of images misguided. home. I the community. refurbish history whilst work my give memories that believe cultural communities are a who my told I and Registry ill, the returning. I returning. I know home. who all artists. Tower, imagine me am those re-assurance at doing this. How can my those made your portraying seems recent through lived ill, to welcoming removing people community return'. hold psychologist, improving whilst this helped when the gardening. Imagine home. I been appears are that going at social My life you home I helping the will stressing, be differently, called housing me in that area? of at a home. I is flat. Recently statistics the mind explanation are Balfron that by communities to it an a told feel of about not of that to a community. is home? Where am my home, your stressing, called the are home. area? appearing to speech it Tower, that understand improving it you and rights where an Hamlets with am my home, whilst give community my showing my based Office. Being to due appearing My his social to not to want you Mayor, one community. This me my that to citizen. Over me of be members. of astonishment home. I told its the that right me community these be my as is for my improving have be delivering worry to a child my treating a that letter be to leave feel I to affecting booklet.

Fantastic not
Later, as he sat in his studio looking at the work, Simon Terrill reflected on the unusual events that had taken place within this huge apartment building during the previous nine months. For this photograph he had moved into the 21st floor of Balfron Tower, 10496 miles away from his previous home. From this height he could see all of London without being seen himself. The view was extraordinary. Looking out from the windows, your eye-line was at the same level as the horizon. You could easily think that you were standing on the deck of a great concrete ship, if it weren’t for the squirrel that defied both gravity and sense by appearing on the balcony every so often. From his bed every morning he could see the angry traffic lining up at the entrance to the Blackwall Tunnel. Sitting at the kitchen table he saw London erupt on Guy Fawkes Night, watched the Eye change colour and a supermarket change hands. He kept time by looking out to the clock a few blocks away above the little market where he purchased the phone that never worked and the earplugs bought to block out the traffic that had been stolen from the box so when he got home he discovered that all that was left were instructions. Standing on the balcony he could see the lights being turned on at the Brownfield Social Club and knew that they were open when the butt-filled bucket had wedged open the back door. It was a small veneered drinking spot, open every other night, growing out of the walkway to the tower and decorated with sporting heroes from the 1970s and fluorescent lighting. He became their 52nd member.

He could see everything from Balfron Tower but the tower itself. Unlike Guy de Maupassant who famously disliked the Eiffel Tower so much that he frequently dined in its restaurant because it was the only place in Paris where he didn’t have to see it, Simon wanted not only to be inside the tower, he wanted to look at it too. As tireless as the spectacular view from its heights, was the continuously astonishing sight of the tower itself from outside. An anomaly in the landscape, it loomed in space like a concrete castle. It was Brutal, both in genre and encounter, yet when viewed from the side was so slender that it could almost be considered delicate. It was like living inside of a sculpture.

A long-time Ballardian and fan of High-Rise, Simon became obsessed with Ernö Goldfinger, the architect of Balfron Tower. Following its construction forty-four years ago, Ernö and his wife Ursula had also lived in the building. They hosted champagne parties for their neighbours in an effort to discern the residents’ reactions to their new home. Goldfinger wanted confirmation that the spirit of community could continue to exist within this overhead suburbia that he saw as being the future of London.
Soon after he moved in, Simon delivered homemade flyers informing all Balfron residents of his upcoming photographic project: a portrait of the tower and its inhabitants in 2010. The letterboxes in Balfron Tower had been built into the front door of each apartment, a vertical slit lined by a black bristled moustache. It was hard to push the A4 paper though some of the more tightly compressed hairs and there was an incident on the 6th floor where he had inserted his hand into the slot to get the flyer inside and his finger was severely bitten by a dog. Simon invited his neighbours to visit him in his studio flat and answered questions about the event that was to take place in the coming months.

It wasn’t the first time he had embarked on such a venture. For the past six years he had been working on a photographic series called Crowd Theory that saw him focusing on specific sites like railway stations, ports, sports fields and other inner-city apartment blocks, meeting all involved with those settings and responding with a mural-sized photographic portrait of both people and place. Simon’s background in theatre and sculpture can be seen in the pictures he makes. His photographic shoots become stages complete with lighting and soundtrack but importantly, without choreography. Each body he invites to take part chooses to participate and they direct their own movement and placement within the image. It’s a little Brechtian, but instead of the audience being made aware of their critical role, it is the subject who is presented with their own character, as their world becomes a stage for the art.

It was however, the first time that Simon, as a Balfronian, belonged to the community that he was portraying. He had always struggled with the term ‘community’, seeing it as a manufactured attempt at coherence and belonging, and yet it was the idea of community that defined the work. Perhaps it was an artist’s fear of affiliation, as with Groucho Marx not wanting to belong to any club that would have him as a member. In this instance, Goldfinger’s vision for Balfron Tower was probably more inclined towards Karl Marx in its dream of community fulfillment. This vision infused Simon’s thoughts as much as it did the giant concrete block that remained standing as a testament to its belief. Living within the relic of a utopian dream, Simon is nonetheless part of a community of artists living amongst a community of Bengalis and East Enders. Together they form the Balfron community.

As the November shoot drew nearer, he searched for the right place to situate the large format film camera that was to capture the image on the night. It was the end of summer and the trees were mostly bare, except for the three that stood directly in front of the tower. The decision was made to shoot from the right, on the roof of Glenkerry House across the road and Simon worked alongside project manager Benn Linnell to coordinate the event. The whole thing lasted an hour. Ten photographs were taken. Vats of curry generously cooked by neighbours were wolfed down and followed by rounds of drinks at the Social Club. The negative was enlarged and the final print allowed for a view into every window. Despite its history of being portrayed as uncompromising and bleak, in this photograph Balfron Tower is majestic and futuristic still, as it glows with its people beneath a velvety bruised sky. For a while afterwards, the view from the balcony looked different to Simon. Something had changed, but he was still there in the tower and from his home on the 21st floor he looked out towards the photograph of Balfron, four yards away.

Plates pp
2-3 Site plan
6 Tower sketch #1
7 Speech notes
8 Babel
5 Flyer
9 Arts council
11 Tower sketch #2
12 Tower smudge
13 Newman
14 Balfron Tower (detail)
15 Balfron Tower, type C print, 2010
16 - 19 Balfron Tower (detail)
20 -21 Tower of Balfron, digital collage
22 Concrete cupid
28 Balfron birds

Texts pp 7, 9,10,13 - One thousand emails sent and received during the making of the project, selections cut up and arranged by Chantal Faust.
Published to accompany the exhibition Balfron Project II, March to October 2012 at 2 Willow Road. With thanks to the National Trust staff and volunteers of 2 Willow Road.

3 Mar–4 Nov 2012
2 Willow Road, Hampstead, London NW3 1TH
Telephone: 020 7435 6166
Email: 2willowroad@nationaltrust.org.uk
www.nationaltrust.org.uk/2-willow-road

The Balfron Project project was produced in partnership with Bow Arts Trust. The project was made possible with the support of the Bow Arts Trust Studio Residency at their Heritage Flat, 123 Balfron Tower - a partnership between the Bow Arts Trust and Polar HARCA. The project received support from the National Lottery through Arts Council England, Bow Arts Trust and IDCF.

Balfron Tower Production Credits:
Production Manager: Benn Linnell
Production Coordinator: Rob Crosse
Camera: Paul Knight
Gaffer: Reuben Garrett
Sound Designer: Chris Letcher
Catering: Ellie Howitt, Nilu Begume, Ruth Solomons, Hannah, Sian Hislop
Head of Estate Services: Derek Barclay
Documentation stills: Ollie Harrop
Time lapse video: Tim Bowditch, Dave Angus, Stuart Ward
Afterparty: DJ Pause (aka Chantal Faust)
Production and participant liaison: Sam Overington, Joe Graham, Victoria Hume, Rachel Noble, Sarah Bayliss, Ella Britton, Emily Bench, Florence Ross, Pippa Connolly, Oliver Marchant, Laura Cooper, Rachel Barclay, Jeremy Clarke, Fran Laws, Rob Smith, Becky Lees, Michael Cubey, Tilly Hogrebe, Catherine McKinney, Alex Anthony
Production assistants: Anna Sexton, Ellie Howitt
Bow Arts Trust: Marcel Baettig, Jeremy Clarke, Catherine McKinney
Project website: Natasha Giraudel and Geeks Ltd
Special thanks to: Marcel Baettig, Jeremy Clarke, Joe Graham, John Walter, Shane Davey & Davey Inc, Balfron and Carradale Residents Committee, Brownfield Social Club, and Chantal Faust
Thank you to the residents of Balfron Tower
The Balfron Project is dedicated to the memory of Benn Linnell

Text p5, pp 24-25 © Chantal Faust

Copyright © Simon Terrill

ISBN 978-0-9571861-1-8

Printed by www.ubyubooks.com
Published by Simon Terrill 2012
www.simonterrill.com